Goering Says Air Force
Always Be More Than
Other Assaults

BERLIN, May 2.—Hermann Goering, minister of aviation, said today the German air force, because of its superior quality of men and machines, would be more than a match for any assault, even though that assault was numerically stronger.

Goering made this statement to a gathering of foreign correspondents.

"If you ask how strong the Reich is in the air," said the aviation leader, "I reply it will always be a match for any side combination, for or against peace. Let whoever dare attack us with his machines, we will have absolutely the most powerful machines and pilots."

"I have suffered a great deal in the air," said Goering, "but I have seen and know the matter of an air force. A year ago I could say with good conscience that we had nothing. We had only machines hidden in the forests or underground, as the stories went. They simply weren't there, but now they are returned to disarm, we were forced to arm ourselves."

THIS WAR-MAD WORLD: "Germa's Millions Forewarned"

Germany, according to reports circulated in London, Paris and Rome, is manufacturing many new and terrible war weapons: bullets that penetrate armor plate six inches thick; rotative guns, with five barrels firing a thousand rounds a minute; stratosphere rockets, radio-operated, and charged with high-explosive poison gas and germs; "Z" rays, to provide an "invisible wall" against France; and machine guns, weighing only eighteen pounds, and firing 600 rounds a minute. Such devastating devices would make the reich safe from all enemies. But she does not feel secure. She heeds her military propagandists, who warn of deadly modern horror inventions in foreign countries, and fearfully prepares her civilians against enemy attacks from the air.

BERLIN IS PREPARED—The armors who supported Adolf Hitler's rise to power have completely persuaded Germany that she needs more adequate military protection. All civilians have been led to believe that the reich is in imminent danger. They are learning how to conduct themselves during an air attack. Every household must display a placard, pledging the family's support of the government's defense program. Squads of young men have been formed to protect the populace. They wear rubber suits and gloves and gas masks. The Berlin contingent is seen here, riding the streets of chemical deposits left by poison gas, after the "enemy" attack is over.

EVEN ANIMALS ARE READY—So frantic have Germans become, they are training their domestic animals and birds to be of service during times of dire need. Horses and dogs are accustomed to the wearing of gas masks, and led through waves of gas fumes. Carrier pigeons have been recalled to duty, to serve where radio and telephone might be intercepted. This horse and rider, at right, present a strange appearance in their odd-looking gas masks.

MASKS ARE HABERDASHERY NOW—Gas masks have become a regular article on display in hat and clothing stores throughout the reich. This photograph was taken outside a noted hat shop in Leipzig. A large placard in the show window carries the inscription: "Protect yourself from poisonous gases. Carry gas masks." This is the nation-wide warning to Germans who may be caught on the streets during an air raid. Others are being trained to rush to gas-proof cellars built under prominent buildings in all principal cities.

SCHOOL CHILDREN ARE DRILLED—A "precaution" rehearsal is held in the schools once a week. The pupils are taught that the most important feature of a gas mask is in correctly adjusting it on the head. Each child dons a mask and experts conduct examinations to see that the children will know how to look after themselves in an emergency. It is not a coincidence that children of a dozen other countries are being similarly trained. Gas mask manufacturing has become a great and profitable business in these days of national uncertainty and fear. So has the production of poison gas. Even in the United States this week, the president of a large chemical firm stated: "The chemical industries hold the key to national defense. Their products can be converted into the materials so important in waging war."
